

In recent years the Administration has not only striven to achieve equality of pay treatment for employees in the civilian and private military contractors. The systems but has sought to be military compensation into civilian pay and harmony with the civilian economy. The Government's civilian pay advances have been matched by comparable increases in military compensation. This step significantly reduced the level of tension between military civilian personnel in the Defense Department. The pay adjustments were authorized at different times and different amounts for military and civilian personnel who are working on common defense projects.

Further step toward compatibility should come from conversion of military pay allowances to a military pay system directly comparable with civilian pay. The military is currently under active consideration by the Armed Services Committee. The pay system would be a major step toward bridging the gap between military and civilian pay.
